Note	The program offers an integrated approach across multiple disciplines. Linguistics and Philology cover Middle Mongol in its various writing systems (traditional Mongolian, 'Phags-pa square script, and Arabic-Persian), the Khitan language of the Liao dynasty, and modern Khalkha Mongolian. Culture and Society explore the richness of Mongolian life, from mobility and nomadic lifestyle to Oyrat traditions, ritual dances, dairy culture, education, and the several other aspects of the material world of Mongolic peoples. History will explore the Mongol Empire at its height during the 13th and 14th centuries, examining its political structures, conquests, and enduring legacy. Religion explores Mongolian Buddhism and shamanic traditions, tracing their evolution from past to present. Historical linguistics traces how Mongolic languages evolved over time. Language contact investigates how Turkic and Mongolic languages have influenced each other in Mongolia - a cutting-edge field for understanding Central Asian linguistic and cultural exchange. The program will include insights into Marco Polo and his accounts of the Mongols, in comparison with William of Rubruck and Giovanni da Pian del Carpine.
